A young Dutch scientist named MARTINUS BIEJERNICK isolated bacteria belonging to the genus Rhizobium growing within the small nodules visible on the roots of legume plants (nitrogen fixers).

The legumes have evolved a system of keeping out bacteria but have developed mechanisms that attract rhizoidal bacteria & then activate several of their genes.

The nitrogen then begins to produce complex sugars and enzymes that cause the long roots of the plant to curl & allow the bacteria to enter.

Then they encounter special host cells in which they set up shop & fix N₂.
